Equitable Budget Process

Guidance for Department Directors

Embracing an equitable, diverse, and inclusive workforce fosters an environment where a variety of ideas and perspectives are derived, welcomed, and implemented; all for the betterment and growth of the City, as an organization and as a community.

As the City looks to be a leader in Equity, Diversity and Inclusion (EDI), we must embed EDI concepts across all departments and processes therein, from Human Resources to Economic Development to Facilities to Finance. The Equitable Budget Process (EBP) is designed to integrate equity into decision-making, including policies, practices, programs, guidelines, and the development of department budgets. Implementation of these concepts can help develop strategies and identify actions that reduce inequities and improve success for all people that the City of Colorado Springs serves.

Equity involves accommodating differences, and providing everyone with the same access to opportunities by removing systemic barriers. This involves providing access to data, information, jobs, education, tools, resources, rewards, etc.

There are many benefits to the City as an employer, City employees, and residents by having an Equitable Budget Process.

Equitable Budget Process in Practice

The Budget Process aims to ensure that Departments evaluate how projects, programs, plans, and proposals may improve equity in service delivery and community participation.

The Equitable Budget Process is flexible and is expected to evolve over time. The following considerations are a starting point and provide practical guidance and examples:

Apply an Equity Lens to assess impact: departmental budget decisions should consider potential economic benefits and burdens to the entire community, including areas that are traditionally under-resourced.

- a. Consider how your department’s operating and capital budget could be aligned to advance equity in our community. (For example: Prioritize capital projects that expand opportunity and access for under-resourced neighborhoods.)

- b. Consider how budget reductions will impact traditionally under-resourced communities? What can be done to mitigate negative impacts? (For example: waiving or reducing fees for specific populations; pursuing grant funding for a critical community resource, etc.)
- c. Consider how to equitably distribute the benefits and burdens of growth in our community, in order to minimize harm to vulnerable populations. (For example: include criteria to analyze potential displacement and opportunities for affordable housing).

Be Equity Data Driven: Assess equity data indicators to inform budget decisions.

- a. Utilize data to prioritize and develop criteria for the allocation of resources. (For example: use Transit ridership data and known placement of bus stops to decide which sidewalks are prioritized for repair)
- b. Consider how demographic data can be used to inform budget decisions (For example: when evaluating new or updated fees for service, consider the effects on low to middle income residents.)
- c. Consider how your department will use demographic data to help inform recruitment, retention and promotion efforts (For example: allocate time and resources for EDI training for staff and hiring managers).

Equitable Engagement and Inclusion: Assess engagement and inclusion in the budget process for equitable representation and input. Strive for equitable and excellent service to the entire community.

- a. Consider equity in the allocation of resources during the budget process. (For example: Consider the appropriate classification of a requested new position. It may be tempting to select a less costly classification in order to facilitate the approval, but may result in disparities in work load and expectations in similar jobs across the city.)
- b. Consider how the budget will build capacity to engage with and include under-resourced neighborhoods in our community as stakeholders, advisors, and in leadership positions (For example: allocate or request resources for events that inform and solicit input from all areas of our community).
- c. Consider how your department will ensure that public documents, policies, plans, meetings, and hearings are easily and appropriately accessible to all community members, including translation and ADA accessibility of documents and presentations.
- d. Consider how you can reward employees that champion EDI principles. (For example: submit a nomination to the Awards Committee for someone that goes above and beyond to make a new employee feel included and part of the team.)

How to Ensure Success:

- a. Invest resources in EDI education and exposure for employees
- b. Utilize equity data to make decisions
- c. Encourage EDI allyship and partnership
- d. Continually consider how financial decisions impact the community
- e. Engage and inform community stakeholders
- f. Seek out employee ideas, knowledge, perspectives and approaches
